THE LAST SCENE IN THE GUINN TRAGEDY.

SUICIDE OF THE MURDERER.

On Saturday night, probably before midnight, George W. Guinn, convicted at the last term of the Cook County Circuit Court of the murder of his wife and two boys, left the world in a new line, which had been granted to him as an asylum or infirmity to the condition of the convict in his trial, committed suicide in his cell in the County Jail. He had secured a piece of rope by stealing the bed-tick which covered the bed, by ripping the bed-tick between the wall and the bed, and then effected his object in his cell. He took one end of the rope and fastened it to the bed-post, and then to the bed, and then climbed from under him, his feet being about six inches from the floor. When he was discovered, yesterday morning he was perfectly stiff and cold. Coroner Booth, upon being informed of the circumstances, called a jury and sat upon the body; assembling, and while returned a verdict in accordance with the facts. Among the property of the suicide, found in his cell, was a pocket-knife, with which he cut the rope, and then stuck it into his side, as he had before stated he would, from the fact that he was determined, yesterday morning he was perfectly sober and cool
